Gay garnishes give added zest to foods in the same way that smart-looking accessories pep up your wardrobe, says Extension specialists.

They suggest that citrus fruit garnishes give flavor and distinction to any food, and are available all year. To make wedges, cut citrus fruit in half lengthwise; cut each half into thirds. Use plain or sprinkle with spices.

To make cartwheels, cut citrus fruit crosswise into thin slices. To notch cartwheels, make small notches on peel. For chunks, quarter cartwheels. To make bow-ties, cut two pie-shaped wedges on opposite side of cartwheel, leaving membrane in center to hold slice together.

Use lemon slices or wedges, with chopped parsley, as a fish or meat garnish. Orange slices studded with cloves are a go-pether for meat garnishes. Use orange garnishes around ham, lemon slices on braised pork chops.

Properly used, garnishes also are a pleasant addition to salads. Peppers, red or green, may be cut in rings, strips, or fancy shapes and sprinkled over the salad.

Serve cheese grated, shredded, diced, or in balls. Cheese balls are made by mixing cottage, cream, or American cheese with mayonnaise and molding the mixture into balls. For an extra touch, roll the cheese balls in ground nuts or minced parsley.

Chopped or whole nuts, whole or cut pickles and olives, sliced or chopped hard cooked eggs, all serve as garnishes .Cucumber may be served plain or fluted. For fulted cucumber slices, draw a fork lengthwise from end to end, then make thin slices.

Three Honored by Local F. F. A. Group

Robert F. Holmes, Earl J. Smith and J. Everett Tibbs were the recipients of Honorary Chapter Farmer Degrees in the local F .F. A. Chapter recently. They received these awards at the Robert E. Lee Chapter Future Farmers of America Father-Son Banquet.

Mr. Earl Smith, Director of Instruction for Appomattox County, received his award from Myron Richardson, Chapter Secretary. Myron pointed out that Mr. Smith was tireless in his efforts to coordinate the activities of the various departments and phases of education in the county. Also, that Mr. Smith aided vocational - agriculture and the F. F. A. work by helping plan schedules and solve other administration problems.

Mr. Robert Holmes, County Forester, was presented the Honorary Chapter pin and certificate by Jack Henry, Chapter Reporter. Jack told of some of Mr. Holmes' activities which have aided the F. F. A. Such things as training the KVG crews for forest fire fighting, helping to set up chapter forestry judging contests, helping train students to plant pines properly and to manage forestry enterprises, and providing literature and movie films for aid in chapter forestry work were mentioned.

In the absence of Mr. J. Everett Tibbs, who was in the Far West on a forestry tour, Jack Tibbs, accepted his pin and certificate. Jack, president of the Robert E. Lee Chapter, accepted the award for his father from Kinckle Martin, past president of the local chapter, and now a student at V. P. I., Blacksburg.

ABILITY AS MANAGER IMPORTANT IN BEEF BUSINESS IN VIRGINIA

Managerial ability will be one of the most important factors in beef cattle business in the years ahead, says Curtis Mast, animal husbandman at VPI.

The cattle business is as sound as the manager's ability to make it, in Mast's thinking. For people going into the beef business, he has this advice.

Study resources carefully. Generally, beef cows fit extensive farming operations. They can handle steep land, poor grade pasture, and poor grade roughages better than any other class of cattle. On the other hand, steers fit intensive farming operations. They fit high priced land, good quality pasture, and plenty of grain, Cows also require less know-how on the part of the operator and will often get through difficulties which the farmer doesn't know how to handle himself. Steers must be guided from day to day by the watchful eye and careful hand of the manager.

If you don't have much experience, and aren't too adept at handling livestock, you'll get along better with beef cows than with the steers, Mast says.

The long time outlook for the cattle business in Virginia is excellent, he says. Beef cattle numbers will increase across the board. Hilly and rolling lands will increase in cow numbers and stocker steers, and the coastal plain will step up its cattle feeding. In the next 20 years, Virginia should pass the million mark in beef cattle numbers, as compared to around 750,000 today.

SELLING LIGHT PROFITABLE PRACTICE FOR HOG PRODUCERS

Hog producers can pocket extra profits if they sort their hogs out and sell them at light weights, says R. M. Godsey, associate animal husbandman at VPI.

Topping out the animals weighing from 200 to 220 pounds has been an accepted practice for some time now. This practice has several advantages, Godsey says. For instance, marketing a pig crop in four or five different groups takes some of the gamble out of hog raising. Topping the hogs means more efficient use of feed, as feed efficiency drops off quickly as hogs go above 200 pounds.

A hog will put on only a small amount of lean meat from 200 pounds on. Most of the gain is in the form of lard, As the weight goes up, so does the proportion of fat to lean on a-carcass. So sorting out and topping the animals makes it possible to market meatier hogs.

Where To Put Fertilizer in Setting Tobacco Plants

Put fertilizer in the soil so it will not be in direct contact with roots of newly set plants. Proper placement will help get a better stand and give larger yields of better quality tobacco. If you lay off shallow rows and make a low list, the chances are that roots of newly set plants will be too close to the fertilizer.

Two Right Ways

BAND PLACEMENT: Put down fertilizer in two bands 7 inches apart and deep enough so it will be slightly below (about 2 inches) the roots when plants are set. Be careful to set your plants between the bands. And when listing, be careful not to push the two bands together.

DEEP PLACEMENT: If you use equipment that puts the fertilizer in one band, use an 8-to 10-inch shovel so that the fertilizer is placed 6 to 8 inches deep. If the soil is shallow, you may need to use a high list instead of digging deep.

ASK YOUR COUNTY AGENT if you need further information.
